Ⅱ 次の英文を読み、空所 9 ～ 13 を埋めるのに文脈上最も適切なものをそれぞれ①～④の中から一つずつ選びなさい。

Many book-lovers hate the thought of throwing a book in the trash, but tons and tons of books are ( 9 ) globally each year, either shredded by publishers or libraries, or tossed out when people empty old houses. Garbage collectors in Ankara, Turkey, however, decided to give some of those abandoned volumes a new life by collecting books off the garbage heap. The result, according to Spencer Feingold and Hande Atay Alam at CNN, is a more than 6,000-book library that now serves their community.

The project started when garbage collectors in Ankara's Çankaya district began collecting books for fellow workers and their families to borrow, but the collection kept growing and soon there was interest from other people in checking out the growing list of nonfiction and fiction titles. "We started to discuss the idea of ( 10 ) from these books. When everyone supported it, this project happened," the mayor of Çankaya, Alper Tasdelen, tells CNN.

While Turkey does have its own public library system, run by the Ministry of Culture and Tourism, in 2017 Turkey's Daily Sabah noted that there is currently just one public library for every 70,000 people in Turkey. ( 11 ), the "Library Map of the World" for 2016 reported that there was one public library for every 6,200 people in the European Union.

Agence-France Presse (AFP) reports that the garbage collectors' collection of books is housed in a former brick factory, whose long corridors proved ( 12 ) for a library. The building itself also serves as a community social center, and includes a barber shop, a café, a lounge with chess boards, and administrative offices (some of which are furnished with furniture and office equipment that have also been rescued from the trash).

The library's books have been divided into 17 ( 13 ) such as romance, economics, and children's fiction, and the collection is still growing. Not only do the workers continue to collect books as they work, but by last count they still have 1,500 books that they need to catalogue and shelve. Additionally, people are now sending them books through the mail.

In the future, the AFP reports that the garbage collectors have plans to create a mobile library with their materials to send to local schools.

Tom: Hello, Jim. I haven't seen you for such a long time. How have you been?

Jim: Hi, Tom. It's good to see you. I've been doing fine. How about you?

Tom: I've been very well. Did you hear that ( 26 )?

Jim: Yes, I heard about that. How's it going?

Tom: It's been hard work learning new skills. I've never worked in sales before, so it's been a challenge, but I'm enjoying it.

Jim: ( 27 ). When I joined my company, I'd never worked with computers before. Learning IT skills was hard to begin with, but now I'm fine.

Tom: I don't know if you're free this Saturday, but I have some tickets for a baseball game. Would you like to go with me?

Jim: ( 28 ). Yes, I'd love to go with you. It's been a long time since I went to a baseball game.

Tom: Me too. I remember when we were at university, we used to go and watch games all the time.

Jim: Yes, those were good times. Once you start working, you never seem to have time to just go out and have some fun.

Tom: We would always go with Andy and David. Do you remember? Are you still in touch with them?

Jim: ( 29 ). I see Andy from time to time. He's planning to get married next year. But I've lost contact with David. He moved to Europe to take a job with a big car maker.

Tom: Well, on Saturday, let's go and enjoy the game and forget about work for a few hours.

Jim: That sounds like a good plan. ( 30 ).

Tom: Great! Meet me at the stadium, Gate C4, at two o'clock.

Jim: I'll see you there.
